HOLDS MUCH PROMISE

Sponsored by George Graham Rice, the new Broken Hills silver camp, situated partly in Nye and partly in Mineral county, is attracting the attention of the leaders of the mining industry of this country.

It looks very much as if Rice has picked a winner, or at least a mining sensation that will be calculated to make a resounding noise for a period of time to come.

Governor Emmet D. Boyle, himself a mining engineer of national standing, and Arthur Perry Thompson, noted as one of the foremost geologists of the country, have placed their stamp of approval on the Broken Hills mine.

The initial stockholders' list is stated on excellent authority to contain the names of more noted Nevada mining men and men in high public office than any other new mining proposition which has been brought out in many years, says the Nevada News Letter of August 7.

Without any intention to make an invidious comparison, it may be said that the Tonopah Divide property, which was boomed from around 10 cents a share to $12 a share, failed at any stage in its career to gather under its banners such a galaxy of mining and other leading men as the Broken Hills. To be sure, Tonopah Divide and the Divide camp itself give every indication of "coming back" and the rebound may possibly carry some of the leading issues of that district to levels within striking distance of former "high," but it is a fact none the less that there appears no division of sentiment among leading investors as to the downright, sheer intrinsic merit of Broken Hills.

In this regard it is worthy to note that there has not been a camp in the state which has reared its head since the early days of Tonopah that did not gather unto itself a group of lusty "knockers" who were ready, after a hasty examination, to proclaim far and wide that the new camp was destined to failure. Here, in the instance of Broken Hills, search where the inquirer may, it is almost impossible to arouse anybody who has taken the pains to visit the district, to express himself unfavorably.

Since early in May there has been a hush of mining men to the Broken Hills camp, larger in number by far than to any other district in the state, new or old, and this does not except the Comstock, which is again bidding lustily for public acclaim. If reports be true, such captains of industry as the Duponts and such mining engineers of national fame as Seelye W. Mudd have their men on the ground. They are closely observing developments. The shades of the late Captain De Lamar have also haunted the camp in the person of Charles Kaeding, formerly the old bonanza king's chief mining engineer, as also "Tom" McNamara, one of the late De Lamar's mining superintendents. Even so long forgotten a mining hero as Ross Thompson, for whom the great gold copper camp of Roseland, B. C., was named, has been seen roaming the arroyos of the new bonanza silver district.

"Ben" Luce, trailblazer of every new mining camp from the Tonopah days down, in Nevada and Utah, made a 300-mile trip to Broken Hills, coming and going from Tonopah by auto. "It is bigger than Tonopah," is the exact language he was quoted as using on his return.

Oscar Daube, New York and San Francisco stock broker, personal representative of the Bernheimer estate in New York, which owns the control of the Tonopah Extension, is reported to have said in Reno early this week:

"It's another Tonopah. The formation is just the same. Surely, I never saw so much ore indicated on the surface at any time in Tonopah." George Williams, septuagenarian president of the Churchill County bank at Fallon, and for 40 years one of Nevada's noted sheep raisers and ranchmen, paid a single visit to the camp, bought a property adjoining the Broken Hills mine for $100,000, called the Silver Trailer, for the first time in his life became president of a mining company, and then exuded his ardor with the exclamation:

"It is a world beater. I want some of it." Lee Glockner, former superintendent of the $5,000,000 Stratford Independence mine of Cripple Creek, a hero among mine superintendents because he was shot full of holes defending the property against "high-graders," said after his first day to the camp, according to creditable report:

"It is a whale if there ever was one." The stock markets have lately

PHILIPPINES TO
HAVE PAPER MILL(Correspondence of Associated Press)
MANILA, P. I., July 29.—Paper for use in the Philippines is to be manufactured at a paper mill to be established by the National Development company near here, it was announced recently. The company is a governmental corporation. At present all paper used on the islands is imported.**
been all awry, market quotations for all kinds of listed issues, including those of the highest investment grade, are selling at panic or near-panic prices.

But nothing daunted, mining men from every direction have given staunch proof of the depth of their feelings about Broken Hills by enrolling their names on what George Graham Rice proudly refers to as the "blue ribbon" list of stockholders of the Broken Hills Silver corporation.

Everybody in Nevada who knows George Graham Rice, his friends and his enemies, and he has both, admit that he is not sordid and that the primary purpose of every one of his promotions is success, with the big 8 harking back over a period of 15 years, from the early days of Goldfield down, these facts stand out, namely: Rice has never selected a property for exploitation which did not have the earmarks of making a success. He has never failed to employ the highest class engineers to report on his properties and to develop them. He has never failed to finance them, and to see them through from a mining development standpoint. Finally and very important, he has never failed to give the public a run for its money in the stockmarkets.

It may already be said with regard to this sponsorship of Broken Hills that before the Broken Hills Silver corporation was incorporated the camp was unknown even in the state of Nevada. Today it is known in every Nevada hamlet and is probably the subject of more gossip, speculation and office and street talk than any other mining property or district in the whole state.

Nor is the early fame of Broken Hills confined to state limits. New York and San Francisco, Toronto and Winnipeg, Boston and New Orleans, know considerably more about Broken Hills than the average observer would readily believe. The indications are that before autumn comes around and the shrubs and trees are in their sear and yellow leaf, we shall experience here in the state of Nevada another hair-raising boom centering in Broken Hills such as marked the early days of Tonopah, Goldfield and the other boom camps of Nevada history.

What is the showing in the Broken Hills district, which has aroused the interest of the big mining men of the state?

Simply this: Two miners, unfriended and single-handed, "high-graded" the Broken Hills ground over a period of time and shipped, to the Western Ore Purchasing company 400 tons of ore for which the Western Ore Purchasing company made an official settlement on a basis of 130 ounces of silver per ton.

One of the recent shipments of 35 tons averaged 223 ounces of silver per ton.

In the course of their operations the two miners opened up a vein for a length of about 400 or 500 feet and for a depth of 150 feet. This has been found under expert examination to average five feet in width. The entire depth and length of the ore body as opened up averages, according to Arthur Perry Thompson and Governor Boyle, $15.75 a ton. This includes low grade and high grade and even wall rock which was sampled and allowed to average down the values because in the course of mining ore for production it is usually necessary to break down some wall rock.

Recently, under the management of the Broken Hills Silver corporation, the ore body has been extended on the 150-foot level to the north and to the south in rich ore, and the work of sinking the shaft from the 150-foot level to greater depth has also begun. The shaft is going down on rich ore, too. On the 100-foot level very rich ore is being sacked. In addition to these four workings, all of which are being extended in ore, another shaft has been put down on a cross fissure 500 feet east of the main shaft on a vein of rich silver-lead ore, assaying from $50 to $100 per ton. A drift is now being run at a depth of 30 feet in this rich ore.

A few days ago a new strike was made 300 feet east of the main vein, and a new fissure was opened upon the surface that gave an average assay clear across of better than $30 a ton.

On another claim of the property nearly 1000 feet southwest from the main shaft, an eight-foot deep trench has been run 300 feet across the claim, and a high state of mineralization is reported to be present in every foot.
